How to use QR Code?

Quick Response Code, or the QR Code, is a special feature of this year's Community Radio Compendium. This is a unique code, somewhat similar to a barcode, that will make your station's profile information dynamic – i.e. QR will help people seeking information on your Community Radio Station get the most updated details and information via the web.

How does one access information encoded in the QR Code?

Once you scan the QR code given in the compendium, it will open the Community Radio Station's micro-site on EK duniya anEK awaaz (www.edaa.in) – which is an audio and content exchange platform for Community Radio Stations. The information provided on the micro-site can be updated by the station from time-to-time. In addition to this, the station's profile will remain available to you on your mobile – just a touch away.

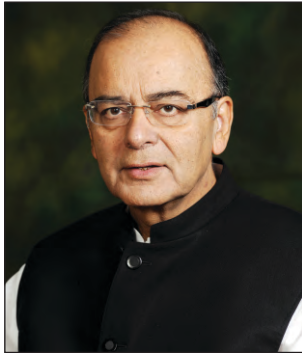

If you have a smartphone, you can use these codes quite easily. All you have to do is download a QR code scanning app from your device's app store, open it and use it to take a picture of the code. It will decode the QR code and then do the action the QR code is asking you to do, i.e. open your station's page on EDAA.

Here is a list of some suggested QR code scanners for each of the major mobile operating systems with direct download links.

- ⦿ Android – Google Goggles, use play store to download
- ⦿ Blackberry – Free QR Code Scanner Pro
- ⦿ iOS (iPhone/iPad/iPod Touch) – Google Goggles available on iTunes
- ⦿ Windows Phone – QR Code Reader
- ⦿ MeeGo – MeeScan
- ⦿ Symbian – BeeTag, use Ovi Store to download

Once you have downloaded the app, simply open it on your phone which should come up with a scan option. You will get an image, as if you were seeing it through your mobile's camera. All you need to do is to simply aim at a QR Code and scan. Once scanned, just click on the link that pops up and then browse and share the station's profile!

MESSAGE

It is a pleasure to note that the annual Compendium of Community Radio Stations 2015 offers an overview of the Community Radio Sector in India and highlights its vital role as a burgeoning medium of communication.

Community Radio provides an avenue alongside other mediums in reaching the diverse Indian populace, in their own languages, with such information and with their own participation in the programmes of such stations.

This medium must be used to its fullest potential, including covering uncovered areas. It is an excellent platform for Government to reach out to those who are in need of information, including the poorest of the poor, on schemes and facilities available to them.

I hope that with continued efforts of Ministry of Information & Broadcasting these stations become the beacons of communication to the communities.

Community Radios are preserving the unique cultural heritage of our country. Many stations have created a rich library of traditional folk songs and have emerged as saviours of dying arts and traditions. They are also providing platforms for unveiling hidden talent of the communities.

I am happy to note that this Compendium, released at the National Community Radio Sammelan, 2015, showcases the sector's role in furthering issues related to governance. I would like to convey my wishes to all delegates of the fifth Community Radio Sammelan.

MESSAGE

It has been about 14 years since the Government of India announced its Community Radio Policy. In its brief history, Community Radio has explored how different ways information, communication processes and media can be leveraged to bring changes in attitudes, behaviour and knowledge in individuals and communities.

This Compendium of Community Radio Stations in India reflects, in one way or the other, the key role that information, communication and the media play, when entrusted to people and communities, in changing their lives and the lives of their communities. The stories of innovation contained in this Compendium show how the quietest voices can be amplified, transmitted and listened to.

The Ministry of Information & Broadcasting is keen to partner with civil society, and especially, community-based organisations to enhance the coverage of Community Radio Stations. It has taken several proactive steps to encourage and support the sector, including providing for essential funds to partially meet infrastructure costs. We hope these steps make India's Community

Radio sector a robust one and an exemplar for other movements for people-owned media elsewhere in the world.

The Ministry of Information & Broadcasting believes that Community Radio play an important role in enlisting people's participation in the development processes of their communities. This belief fuels our partnership with all stakeholders in the Community Radio movement. It is time we expanded on this partnership to include more Community Radio Stations as well as other Ministries and Departments of the Government.

I wish this Sammelan all the best and hope that all delegates and Government officials benefit from the information and ideas coming out of this event to steer the Community Radio movement in the country in the years to come.

MESSAGE

It is a pleasure to know that the Community Radio movement in India is expanding to cover a large part of the country. We believe that community Radio is an important means for disseminating information to the people in the farthest parts of the country in their own languages and, more importantly, created, packaged and delivered by them.

Our combined initiatives have helped the growth of the Community Radio movement in the country, as is evidenced by the number of Community Radio Stations profiled in this Compendium. Indeed, we have come a long way since the setting up of India's first Community Radio Station in 2004. Today, we have 179 operational Community Radio Stations while 218 organisations have signed GOPA.

The Ministry of Information & Broadcasting has taken a number of initiatives to encourage and engage with the sector in meeting the development challenges. We hope that the Plan Scheme, with an allocation of Rs 100 crore, will help upcoming Community Radio Stations with support for their infrastructure requirements.

I am very happy that Community Radio practitioners from across the country are converging on the occasion of the fifth Community Radio Sammelan - organised by the Government as an annual gathering of Community Radio practitioners to share ideas for the growth of the sector.

The theme for this year's Sammelan is 'Community Radio for Good Governance'. This is significant for the role we envisage for Community Radio in the area of governance. This Compendium of Community Radio Stations in India showcases how the Community Radio Stations cater to the information needs of people in far-flung communities, providing a crucial link in reaching the benefits of governance to these communities. We trust that together we can strengthen this link.

MESSAGE

Community Radio is distinct from other radio stations as the former serves as a medium that listens to its audience, a feature that distinguishes it from other media. This remarkable trait has proved to be its main strength, harnessed through a sustained engagement with the community for producing their content.

I am happy to see the work done by many Community Radio Stations featured in this Compendium and to note many partnerships they have fostered with institutions of governance in their regions. Community Radio serves as an important channel for a two-way communication between institutions of governance and the people. The Ministry of Information and Broadcasting seeks more such collaborations by placing this empowering tool in the hands of people. The Ministry is also proud to be a part of many success stories of Community Radio Stations across the country.

In order to encourage the sector, the Government has set aside a Plan budget of Rs. 100 crores to support the Community

Radio Stations in the country. The National Awards in the Sector are also intended towards this end. We hope that these initiatives strengthen the Community Radio sector in the country.

The Fifth Community Radio Sammelan offers stakeholders an opportunity to look back and see how, over the years, a robust partnership between the Government and the community Radio Stations has evolved to empower societies through Community Radio Stations. It is thus appropriate that this Compendium is being released on this occasion. I wish all delegates the best in their efforts towards greater community empowerment through this sector.

FOREWORD

Community Radio: An empowering tool

R Jaya

Joint Secretary, Ministry of Information & Broadcasting, Government of India

There has been a spurt in the media in recent years with the media and entertainment industry growing exponentially over the last two decades. Yet, such growth has not always led to providing a voice for the voiceless, or to reaching out to communities at the grassroots and catering to their interests and aspirations. This voice to the community has been provided by a small sub-sector in the industry, viz the Community Radio sector.

This compendium provides a comprehensive and colourful insight into the diverse worlds of Community Radio Stations in India. It shows how the sector combines within itself the functions of mainstream media, while at the same time providing a platform for community members to air their voices. As such, it is a powerful agent of change, as well as a partner in development. Thus, unlike the other media, it is unique in its approach to issues concerning people. Thus it is truly a medium for the people, by the people and of the people.

It is therefore, inevitable that Community Radio should partner with Government and civil society organisations in India towards achieving the common goal of development. This helps dissemination and exchange of information, ideas and opinions between and amongst these stakeholders. This is therefore a potent medium for communities to voice their aspirations, hopes and fears as well as air grievances and dissatisfactions to concerned agencies.

Recognizing this strength, the Government has supported and encouraged the Community Radio sector for more than a decade now. The result is that today there are 179 operational stations, 218 GOPA holders and 412 applicants with Letters of Intent. This Ministry especially is proud of the contributions that the sector has made in various fields, be it in women's empowerment, disaster management, education, health and so on. It also gratefully notes the sector's immense contribution to dissemination of information on Government's schemes, programmes and initiative. This has fostered an abiding partnership between institutions of Government and the sector.

The Government, in recognition of the potential of the medium, has formulated a Plan Scheme of Rs. 100 crores in the 12th Plan to address issues of expansion and upgradation of the existing Community Radio Stations, capacity building, IEC activities, peer reviews of operational stations and content exchange. It also envisages a significant role for stakeholders in the sector. As a partner and facilitator, the Ministry of Information & Broadcasting has also been pivotal in introducing this medium to other arms of the Government as part of their respective media strategies. This has enlarged the scope of collaboration and partnership. It is also envisaged to enable the sustainability of the stations.

Lest it be thought that the sector is solely focussed on governmental and developmental needs, it would be well to underline the enormous contribution that the sector has made in the 'entertainment' field. Reflecting local arts and other facets and discovering local talent, the sector has brought to the fore many lost cultural worlds.

Combining within it the strength of the community and a format best known as infotainment, the sector is capable of reaching greater heights. The Government is committed to walk with the sector to enable this to happen. I wish all the stations, the stakeholders and the delegates at the Sammelan all the very best in our collective endeavour to expand the footprints and reach of the sector in India.

PREFACE

Giving faces to voices

By Rajiv Tikoo

When the first National Community Radio Sammelan was organised in 2011, it was ambitious to expect that the Sammelan would become an annual event. Today it's a given, which is a tribute to the resilience of this young, dynamic and vibrant community. Though a late arrival, the community radio sector has swiftly and indelibly carved out a niche for itself on the Indian mediascape for more reasons than one.

Community radio is driven by commoners, has local flavour, and displays indigenous upbringing. For masses, community radio is 'us' as against the big media, which is 'them'. Community radio is about a common man's aspirations and grievances, and local authority's responses and misses. Going beyond the favourite taglines like 'giving voice to the voiceless' and 'of the people, by the people, for the people', community radio stations are today set to write the agenda of participatory local governance in their neighbourhoods, which is an important aspect of good governance. It's in keeping up with this spirit that the theme of this year's Sammelan is Community Radio for Good Governance.

This very sentiment is symbolised in this compendium, which has over the years helped institutionalise participatory crowd sourcing of content without much ado. The community radio stations have shared content about themselves in their own words and pictures, capturing their genesis, programme highlights, and fact files. A no-frills reference manual, the annual compendium is like the Bible for the operational community radio stations, aspiring licence applicants, welfare institutions, social marketers and communication researchers.

At the same time, the compendium is expected to act as networking resource material for more than 200 community radio participants from different parts of the country during three days of the Sammelan and thereafter through the year. It will give faces to voices and enable stations connect with one another, thereby creating innumerable spaces for sharing and learning, which is the essential objective of the Sammelan. Bringing out this compendium would not have been possible without the enthusiastic cooperation of operational community radio stations. I am grateful to them for their cooperation and contribution.

I would also like to take the opportunity to thank Shri Arun Jaitley, Minister of Information & Broadcasting and Shri Rajyavardhan Singh Rathore, Minister of State, Ministry of Information & Broadcasting for providing thought leadership for the community radio sector. I am also grateful to Shri Bimal Jhulka, Secretary; Shri J S Mathur, Additional Secretary; and Madam R Jaya, Joint Secretary, Ministry of Information & Broadcasting, Government of India, for their guidance and support in setting the agenda for the Sammelan and the tone of this compendium. The Community Radio Cell's support has been immense in helping us at OneWorld to get our act together. Credit is also due to my team at OneWorld, which has, as usual, risen to the challenge efficiently and effectively to organise the Sammelan and bring out the compendium within challenging timelines.
